The Pink Agenda Supports Breast Cancer Research With A Love, Loss and What I Wore Performance

culture flash

When her play Love, Loss and What I Wore opened at NYC's Westside Theatre last fall, Nora Ephron (acting as guest editor for our October issue) invited a talented cast of women, including Meg Ryan, Diane von Furstenberg, and Rosie O'Donnell, to bring their own sartorial stories out of the closet—and onto the pages of ELLE. One monologue from the play, involving a breast-cancer survivor, inspired a moving performance by Caroline Rhea at last night's spring gala to benefit The Pink Agenda, a charity founded by Marisa Lee after watching her mother's courageous battle with the disease.

I asked the evening's host, Lauren Bush, to reveal her own favorite fashion memory. "The first time I wore one of my own creations," said the Lauren Pierce designer. "Before I had a line, I would make dresses. I wore a navy chiffon one to the CFDA awards—I still have it—and it ended up being selected for the Goddess exhibit at the Met."
